Related Related content K-9 Unit chief and Spokane Police Chief Craig Meidl knew from the very start that it would take more than a basic rescue dog to help find Dworman Green. Two weeks into a nationally search and rescue dog program, called Red Raccoon, the 3-year-old Spokane boy hadn't been found. With the help of the Red Raccoon program and donations from local businesses, the search and rescue team lead by Red Raccoon coordinator Kristin Cramer and K-9 Unit officer Liz Hardigree continued to comb through the ground for the missing boy. With no results, the search team was pushing to find the boy before night fell. On June 5, Red Raccoon was forced to stop searching, at 10:30 p.m., and focus on locating nearby residences to maintain the safety of the search team and the community. On Monday, June 8, police announced that the search team resumed the search at 10:30 a.m. At about noon, Green was found on a remote section of the Little Spokane River. He was transported to Providence Sacred Heart Medical Center where he was stabilized, and released to police. "We had such a good faith belief that we could find him, but the weather has been horrible all day," Cramer said. "It's very humbling when you hear about the community supporting us and the program." Cramer added that the boy is doing well and is improving daily. The Spokane Police K-9 Unit received a request from the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children to donate a rescue dog for the search and rescue team. Cramer said the K-9 unit responded to the request after the boy had already been found. Most area police departments have their own dogs, but it's not common for officers to have a long-term rescue dog. "I think it's a great program," said Meidl, "and we're lucky to have a good leader in it, Kristin." Protective effect of Urological Health Study supplement on spermatogenesis in infertile men. To investigate the efficacy of nutritional supplements, manufactured under Good Manufacturing Practice (GMP), in improving the quality of spermatogenesis. The study was a randomized, double-blind, placebo-controlled, multicenter, 2-year intervention trial that enrolled 636 eligible men from 10 centers in the USA. The subjects were randomized to a daily nutritional supplement, the Urological Health Study (UHS), or a placebo. Subjects were evaluated at 1, 2, 3 and 6 months and again at 12 and 24 months after initiation of supplementation. The primary endpoints were sperm concentration, motility and morphology. Also evaluated was the rate of spontaneous pregnancies. The effect of supplement on the outcome variables was compared between the group receiving the UHS and the placebo group using a repeated measures analysis of variance (ANOVA) and linear regression. The subjects were evaluated again at 24 months to determine if the primary endpoints of the study had been met. From the initial study population, 629 subjects completed 6 months of supplementation. A total of 558 men had data available at 12 months (235/429 in the UHS group and 123/420 in the placebo group). The loss to follow-up was due to relocation and over the course of the study, 3% of the original group withdrew for lack of efficacy. The proportion of subjects with abnormal semen parameters decreased in both groups; however, significant improvement was seen in the UHS group. Significant improvements were seen in the sperm concentration, morphology and motility. The placebo group showed a significant decrease in the sperm concentration at the 6-month and 12-month follow-up evaluations, whereas the UHS group maintained sperm concentration at baseline. The results of this study indicate that the UHS significantly improves the quality of spermatogenesis as measured by sperm concentration and morphology. They reached the UK Top 10 in 1990 with the album Nine Lives. They also released an album, A King's Life, in 1996.
