Field of the Invention The present invention relates to semiconductor memories and, more particularly, to a semiconductor memory device having an access output circuit for outputting an access result to an external portion. 2. Description of the Background Art An example of a conventional access output circuit is shown in FIG. 13. This access output circuit is used in the process of accessing the storage element of a DRAM (Dynamic Random Access Memory) cell array in the conventional semiconductor memory device. When an address signal AD is applied to this conventional access output circuit, address AD is input to one of delay circuits 12. As shown in FIG. 14, delay circuit 12 is composed of a variable delay circuit (hereinafter referred to as VDC) 12a and a fixed delay circuit 12b. VDC 12a delays an input signal output by an odd-numbered bit inverter 14a, and outputs a delayed input signal to a bit inverter

So-called sugar chain structures are present in a wide variety of biomolecules including for example proteins, lipids, carbohydrates, glycosaminoglycans, and extracellular matrices, and their existence has become one of the new target sites for elucidating functions of the biomolecules. Among these sugar chain structures, mucin type sugar chain structures with various functions are present in particular in mucus layers in the living body, and mucin type sugar chain has been attracting attention as a tumor-associated antigen. The roles of mucin type sugar chains as tumor-associated antigens have been studied by using monoclonal antibodies (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "mAbs"). Mucin type sugar chains can be grouped into two types; one is called core type mucin type sugar chain (i.e., "type 1"), and the other is called branched
